When undertaking a process as detailed and personal as constructing one’s custom home, having a strong relationship with the experts involved makes all the difference. At least, that is the belief by which Patrick Scofield and his team at California Home Builders, Inc. operate. “The custom home-building process is much more involved than most assume, and our goal is to create a seamless and memorable experience for our clients and the other professionals involved,” Scofield shares. “We collaborate closely with the client, designers and architects on every project, including supplying samples and mockups on site throughout the build to communicate effectively and meet—if not exceed—expectations.” The perspective has paid off. The family-owned CHB has now amassed more than four decades of experience and is well-known for its above-and-beyond service and quality construction. Focused on the San Diego County region and specializing in traditional and contemporary style homes, the CHB team brings dreams to life in such a way that ensures they will stand the test of time. Alongside the firm’s close, long-standing collaborative relationships with architects and designers, that prioritization of high-quality materials and methods has resulted in an impressive portfolio.

ASK THE EXPERT

What part has the digital age played in the success of your firm?

Design software, along with social media, has greatly expanded the possibilities in the residential building space. The sharing of ideas and concepts amongst architects, designers, builders and homeowners aids in challenging the industry to find solutions to bring visions to life.

Up to this point, what has been your greatest success?

Delivering on our promises and providing world-class service long after the final payment has been received. This has created client relationships that last well beyond project completion and often lead to new referrals, which is the best compliment.
